[CIVIL SUIT NO: 21-08-2003]

CIVIL PROCEDURE: Injunction - Interim injunction - Application to restrain local authority and state government from demolishing temple - Whether local authority was a government department - Whether an interim injunction could be issued against a government body - Whether there was a serious question to be tried - Whether balance of convenience lay in favour of applicants

The plaintiffs were the committee members of the Sri Muniswaran temple at Jalan Kisap, Kuah, Kedah. They applied for an interim injunction against the defendants, the Majlis Perbandaran Langkawi and the State Government of Kedah, to restrain them from demolishing the said temple. The issues were: (1) whether a local authority was a government department; (2) whether an interim injunction could be issued against a government body in view of s. 54(d) of the Specific Relief Act 1950; (3) whether there was a serious question to be tried; and (4) whether the balance of convenience lay in favour of the plaintiffs.

[1] The local authority is not a government department. The words “Government” and “State Government” in s. 3 of the Interpretation Acts 1948 & 1967 are defined as the Government of Malaysia and the Government of a State respectively. If Parliament intended s. 54(d) of the Specific Relief Act 1950 to include local authorities it would have done so. As to whether an injunction could be issued against a government department, s. 29(1)(a) of the Government Proceedings Act 1956 specifically prohibits the court from granting an injunction against the government and the word “injunction” includes all types of injunctions. Although the Rules of the High Court 1980 (‘RHC’) does not contain anything that bars the granting of an interim injunction against a municipality, it is a general procedural law applicable to all proceedings before the court. The

- a* Government Proceedings Act 1956 is a specific law governing all proceedings by and against the government. In case of conflict, the latter should prevail (O. 1 r. 2(2), (3) RHC). (pp 129 d-e, 131 a-g & 132 a-d)
- b* [2] On the issue that the first defendant's notice under s. 72 of the Street, Drainage and Building Act 1974 ('Act 1974') was faulty because the work at the temple were renovations to the existing temple, the photographs exhibited by both parties in their affidavits clearly showed that the construction works were on and outside the building and not done inside an existing building. (p 134 a-c)
- c* [3] The construction works carried out at the temple clearly fell under sub-s. 16(a) of s. 70 of Act 1974. As sub-s. 16(a) was not covered by the proviso of the same sub-section, the plaintiffs were therefore required to submit the necessary plans to the first defendant for the necessary approval which they did not do. (p 134 d-h)
- d* [4] On the submission of the failure of the first defendant to give any notice prior to the demolition notice, s. 72(1)(a) of Act 1974 allowed the first defendant to issue that notice to the plaintiffs "within such time as the local authority may specify". In fact, that section also enabled the first defendant to issue such a notice to any building erected prior to the coming into force of the Act and in contravention of any law then in force to buildings. Under those circumstances, the burden would be on the plaintiffs to show that the temple had obtained the necessary approval as a building. Sub-section 6 of s. 72 relied on by the plaintiffs applied only to a notice of at least 30 days where the building is to be demolished by the local authority themselves. Therefore, on the available facts before the court, the notice issued by the first defendant was proper and in accordance with the relevant provisions of the Act. (p 135 a-c)
- f*
- g* [5] On the plaintiffs' submission that they were not given an advance notice to demolish, the facts showed that there was a lapse of more than three months from the time the plaintiffs were served the notice on 26 February 2003 until this application. This was despite the fact that the notice required the plaintiffs to demolish the temple immediately. (p 135 c-d)

- [6] The temple's existence was based on the goodwill and permission of the two previous landowners. Throughout its existence, it had never acquired any legal, registrable or proprietary interest on the land on which it was situated. The plaintiffs also did not aver anything to that effect. (p 135 h) a
- [7] The status of the land in question when acquired by the State Government reverted back to "state land" within the meaning and effect of the National Land Code ('NLC'). Furthermore, the land was gazetted as a federal road reserve by virtue of the State Government's decision and the Minister's order respectively. The temple in fact and in law was nothing more than a squatter which was allowed to be there by the second defendant until the land was actually needed by the Federal Government. Its continued existence there was actually an offence under s. 425(1) NLC. The temple's long existence on the land could not defeat or override the State Government's title over it. (p 136 a-b) b
- [8] The court disagreed with the plaintiffs' submission that if the interim injunction was not allowed the subject matter would perish. This was because the two newspaper reports exhibited in court showed that the plaintiffs were willing to accept an alternative site for the temple if granted. The construction work at the temple went on unabated and oblivious to the notice served upon them three and a half months earlier to demolish the temple. That certainly was not a conduct of people about to suffer an impending irreplaceable loss. The balance of convenience also favoured the defendants. Public interest outweighed the plaintiffs' interest. (p 138 g) c
- [9] This case had nothing to do with the infringement of the plaintiffs' rights to practice their religion and to own and run their temple under art. 11 of the Federal Constitution. That right as provided in cl. (3)(a), (b) and (c) of that article is subject to the condition that they must conduct themselves "in accordance with law". There were countless of houses of worship in this country existing peacefully without any unnecessary interference. That was because they conducted themselves within the law. The plaintiffs, like everyone else, were duty bound to obey and respect the law. (p 141 a-b) d

JUDGMENT

Zailan Adzam Ghani JC:

The plaintiffs by a summon in chambers applied for an interlocutory injunction against the two defendants to restrain them from demolishing the Sri Muniswaran temple at Jalan Kisap, Kuah, Kedah. They are the committee members of the said temple. The first defendant is the Majlis Perbandaran Langkawi and the second defendant is the State Government of Kedah. The application was ex parte accompanied with a certificate of urgency and an affidavit in support. After a brief hearing the interlocutory injunction was granted against the first defendant but not against the second defendant as the facts in their affidavit disclosed that only the first defendant was actively involved in the impending demolition exercise. The matter was then adjourned to enable the plaintiffs to serve the two defendants the necessary documents for an inter partes hearing. That hearing was then conducted on two dates and hence this decision.

The facts of this matter before me are briefly as follows. The plaintiffs claimed that the temple has been in existence at the location since 1928. It was built and used by plantation workers on a rubber plantation owned by a British company with the consent of the owners. The estate was subsequently bought by Boon Siew Sdn. Bhd. and that company also consented to the existence of the temple. According to the plaintiffs a small road originally existed beside the temple and in 1986 it was replaced with two lane tar road. The temple was used for religious ceremonies including firewalking ceremony and until 2002 the police even issued permits for them to conduct religious procession. The plaintiffs averred that there was no new temple built at the site but admitted that repairs and renovations were done to the original temple.

In their supplementary affidavit the plaintiffs admitted that the first defendant did acquire the land near the temple from Boon Siew Sdn. Bhd. and in 1986 built the two lane tar road. At all times the main shrine was at the same location but that location was subsequently declared a road reserve. They however admitted that the tar road that was built near the temple was not done on purpose, although there was ample area on the other side, but was something that had happened. On 26 February 2003 the plaintiffs were served with a notice dated 16 February 2003 under s. 72 of the Street Drainage and Building Act 1974 by the first defendant to demolish the said temple. The first defendant called the plaintiffs for discussion and negotiation on two occasions but nothing was resolved.

- a* The first defendant in their affidavit in reply admitted that the temple had existed for a long time but it was restored from an old building to a new building without acquiring the prior approval from them and without submitting the necessary plans. That failure of the plaintiffs was in contravention of s. 70 of the Street, Drainage and Building Act 1974 which is an offence under
- b* s. 72 of the same Act. Their affidavit also exhibited an investigation report which revealed an ongoing construction done on the site involving the restoration of the old temple into a new building and the addition of other new structures. The construction was without any written approval of the first defendant and the reconstructed temple encroached into the road reserve with a set back of
- c* only 26 feet from the middle of the road. The minimum set back from the middle of the road allowed was 90 feet. The four photographs exhibited showed the ongoing construction work and the location of the temple. The other exhibits included copies of the notice issued, the plans of the road reserve and the sketch plan of the temple site showing the encroachment of the road reserve.
- d* The first defendant filed a supplementary affidavit which revealed that the land on which the temple is situated (ie, Land Title CRN 36370, Lot No. 1311) was originally owned by Boon Siew Sdn. Bhd., Pulau Pinang. The said land was acquired by the State Government on 24 November 1985 vide Government gazette no. 478/85. A highway was subsequently constructed on the acquired
- e* land. On 13 May 1998 the Kedah State Executive Council approved a proposal for 10 roads in Langkawi, which included the road beside the temple, to be gazetted as federal roads. The necessary order was then made by the Minister under the Federal Roads Act 1959 and gazetted as PU(A)344/1999.
- f* From the affidavits filed on behalf of the two parties there are some undisputed facts. Firstly, the land on which the temple is situated is state land and the plaintiffs' temple has no proprietary or registrable interest in that land. Secondly, the encroachment on the road reserve as shown by the first defendant's various reports and sketch plans was admitted by the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs however disputed the allegation that a new temple was reconstructed in place of the
- g* old temple and averred that they only carried out renovation and repairs on the original temple.
- Before I proceed further there is one matter raised by the first defendant's counsel that needs to be addressed. It was submitted on behalf of the first
- h* defendant, on the authority of the High Court case of Ganad Media Sdn. Bhd. v. Dato' Bandar Kuala Lumpur (No. 2) [2002] 6 CLJ 6, that no injunction can be issued against a local authority under the Specific Relief Act 1950 as they are, in law, a department of the government of Malaysia. However, the same counsel on the second hearing date appeared unsure whether to maintain or withdraw that submission. This was, according to him, after studying the Court of Appeal case of Keet Gerald Francis Noel John v. Mohd Noor b. Abdullah & Ors [1995] 1 CLJ 293. This matter raises two interesting questions related to this application before me which need to be clarified. Firstly, whether a local authority is a department of the government. Secondly, if a local authority is indeed a department of the government, can an interim injunction be issued against them under the Specific Relief Act 1950.

Abdul Malik Ishak J in Ganad Media citing with approval the case of Yap Ea Teck v. Yang DiPertua Majlis Daerah, Kota Tinggi, Johor [1995] MLJ 55 ruled that a local authority is in law, a department of the government of Malaysia. Both these cases came to the conclusion that local authorities are not free from government control and are subservient to the Minister responsible for local government after considering various provisions in the Local Government Act 1976 (ss. 2, 8, 9, 102 and 107(4)).

With due respect to the two learned judges in that two cases, I beg to differ. My reason is this. The words “Government” and “State Government” in s. 3 of Interpretation Acts 1948 and 1967 are defined respectively as:

“Government” means The Government of Malaysia; “State Government” means the Government of a State.

If Parliament intended s. 54(d) of the Specific Relief Act 1950 to include local authorities it would have done so. In interpretation of statutes, especially on the jurisdiction of the court, the Supreme Court in the case of Tan Weng Chiang v. PP [1992] 4 CLJ 2094; [1992] 1 CLJ (Rep) 324, stated:

... Where the meaning of words in the statute is plain and unambiguous, judges should not invent fancy ambiguities ... clear and unambiguous words must exist in such modification or exclusion of the existing powers and jurisdiction of the Court ... The same principle was adopted by the Federal Court in Affin Credit (Malaysia) Sdn. Bhd. v. Yap Yuen Fui ...

In the case of Punca Klasik Bhd. v. Abdul Aziz b. Abdul Hamid & Ors [1994] 1 CLJ 403 at p. 406 James Foong J stated as follows:

... This court does not have such powers to alter, vary or add on to any law as laid down by statute ... The function of this court is not to rewrite statute and give it another meaning when there is a clear and unequivocal provision in the enactment. However harsh the result may be, the court of law has to follow what is enacted by Parliament.

- a* The Government Proceedings Act 1956 which governs all proceedings by and against the Federal Government and the Governments of the States defines “Government” similarly as the Interpretation Acts 1948 and 1967. The element of government control and supervision are not mentioned in these two legislations as a requirement for any agency to be a government department.
- b* Also, the provisions relied by the two cases are common provisions found in other legislations establishing other state and federal statutory bodies. Accepting the two courts’ ruling would effectively make the Government Proceedings Act 1956 and s. 54(d) of the Specific Relief Act 1950 applicable to all these statutory bodies. On the contrary, all these statutory bodies are however governed, in matters relating to court proceedings by, inter alia, the Public Authorities Act 1948.
- c*

However, I note that the learned judge was quite tentative with his ruling when he said that:

- d* In the event I am wrong in the approach adopted by me, I must proceed further to show that an injunction ought not to be granted against the defendant ...

Similarly, in the event I am wrong in my approach, I will proceed on the second issue.

- e* On the second issue, Gopal Sri Ram JCA in the case of Keet Gerald Francis Noel John v. Noor b. Abdullah approved Edgar Joseph Jr. J’s decision in Tan Swan Choo v. Majlis Perbandaran Pulau Pinang [1983] 1 MLJ 232 which held that only perpetual or final injunction are applicable to s. 54 of the Specific Relief Act 1950 and not interim injunction. His Lordship ruled that “the statutory bar encapsulated in s. 54(d) of the Act is confined to perpetual or final injunctions and has no application to temporary injunctions which are governed by s. 51 of the Act ...”
- f*

The relevant passage in the judgment of Edgar Joseph Jr. J (as his Lordship was then) is as follows (at p. 324):

- g*
- h* In the first place, in my view, section 54 of the Specific Act 1950 applies only to applications for perpetual injunctions. It has no relevance to applications for a temporary injunction as in the instant case. This is clear from a reading of Chapters IX and X of the Act which are entitled “of injunctions generally” and “of perpetual injunctions” respectively. Section 54(d) relied on by Mr. Chandran falls under Chapter X which deals exclusively with perpetual injunctions. Next, section 51(1) which falls under Chapter IX states categorically that “temporary injunctions may be granted for any period of a suit and are regulated by the law relating to civil procedure.” This, in my view, makes the Rules of the High Court 1980, applicable and there is nothing therein which constitutes a bar to the granting of an interim injunction against a municipality. a

That ruling, with due respect to his Lordship, seems to be in direct conflict to s. 29(1)(a) of the Government Proceedings Act 1956. That section provides as follows: b

29.(1) In any civil proceedings by or against the Government the court shall, subject to this Act, have power to make all such orders as it has power to make in proceedings between subjects, and otherwise to give such appropriate relief as the case may require: c

Provided that:

(a) where in any proceedings against the Government any such relief is sought as might in proceedings between subjects be granted by way of injunction or specific performance, the court shall not grant an injunction or make an order for specific performance, but may in lieu thereof make an order declaratory of the rights of the parties; and d

(b) ...

(2) The court shall not in any civil proceedings grant any injunction or make any order against an officer of the Government if the effect of granting the injunction or making the order would be to give any relief against the Government which could not have been obtained in proceedings against the Government. (emphasis added). e

This provision specifically prohibits the court from granting an injunction. It states “injunction” and does not qualify that word with all the various types of injunctions available. The plain and simple reading of that word “injunction” would obviously mean to include all types of injunctions. Here then is a provision that clearly prohibits the granting of an injunction against the government, not unlike the provision of s. 54(d) of the Specific Relief Act 1950. Since the Specific Relief Act 1950 provides for various different types of injunction one would think that the term “injunction” in s. 54(d) being a general term would encompass all types of injunction mentioned in the same Act. That interpretation would be in line with the plain and clear word “injunction” used in s. 29(1)(a) of the Government Proceedings Act 1956. Salleh Abas LP in the case of Government of Malaysia v. Lim Kit Siang [1988] 1 CLJ 219; ([1988] 1 CLJ (Rep) 63) in his judgment at p. 223 (p. 67) on the same matter said: f

- a ... the issue of the interim injunction against UEM is absolutely contrary to the expressed words of section 29 of the Government Proceedings Ordinance 1956, as it has in effect indirectly restrained the Government. Section 29 is as follows: ... (his Lordship then quoted section 29(1)(a) and (2)) ...
- b This means that no injunction could be directly or indirectly issued against the Government or its officers. Similarly, the court has no jurisdiction to grant an injunction against a private litigant if the injunction would have the effect of restraining the Government or its officers from performing their functions. This has been the interpretation which has been placed by the courts in England as well as in this country.
- c The other ground of Edgar Joseph Jr. J was that the Rules of the High Court 1980 contains nothing which constitute a bar to the granting of an interim injunction against a municipality (and obviously against the government). The Rules of the High Court 1980 is a general procedural law applicable to all proceedings before the court. The Government Proceedings Act 1956 is a
- d specific law governing all proceedings by and against the government. In case of a conflict I am, respectfully, of the view that the latter should prevail. I am fortified on this by O. 1 r. 2(2) of the Rules of the High Court 1980 which provides that the Rules shall not have effect in relation to proceedings in respect of which rules have been or may be made under any written law for the specific
- e purpose of such proceedings. Rule 2(3) of the same Order is also of the same effect.
- Between the two decisions ie, by the Court of Appeal and that of the Supreme Court, I am of the opinion that I am bound by the decision of the Supreme Court although the matters raised by me are not considered in the Supreme Court's decision. However, in view of my ruling on the first issue that the
- f local authority is not a government department, the Court of Appeal ruling would have no consequence and furthermore, the present matter is an application for an interim injunction.
- I now return to the present case. The law on the granting of an interim
- g injunction is well established. Incidentally, the term "interim injunction" and "interlocutory injunction" are synonymous without any material difference between the two (Singapore Court of Appeal case of Tay Long Kee Impex Pte. Ltd. v. Tan Beng Huwah [2000] SLR 750 at p. 764). The judgment of Jemuri Serjan CJ in the Supreme Court case of Tien Ik Sdn Bhd. v. Peter
- h Kuok Khoon Hwong [1993] 1 CLJ 9 at p. 17 states as follows:
- i

What is relevant and required at that stage is for the learned judge to decide on the affidavits available before him that the claim in the originating summons is not frivolous or vexatious; in other words, that here is a serious question to be tried and having so decided he must go on to consider the question of balance of convenience ...

... So unless the material available to the court at the hearing of the application for an interlocutory injunction fails to disclose that the plaintiff has any real prospect of succeeding in his claim for a permanent injunction at the trial, the court should go on to consider whether the balance of convenience lies in favour of granting or refusing the interlocutory relief that is sought.

The other governing principles for the granting of an interim injunction are found in the words of Lord Diplock in American Cyanamid v. Ethicon Ltd. [1975] AC 396 as follows (at p. 408):

... The governing principle is that court should first consider whether, if the plaintiff were to succeed at the trial in establishing his right to a permanent injunction, he would be adequately compensated by an award of damages for the the loss he would have sustained as a result of the defendant's continuing to do what was sought to be enjoined between the time of the application and the time of the trial. If damages in the measure recoverable at common law would be adequate remedy and the defendant would be in a financial position to pay them, no interlocutory injunction should normally be granted, however strong the plaintiff's claim appeared to be at that stage ...

e

... It is where there is a doubt as to the adequacy of the respective remedies in damages available to either party or to both, that the question of balance of convenience arises. It would be unwise to attempt even to list all the various matters which may need to be taken into consideration in deciding where the balance lies, let alone to suggest the relative weight to be attached to them. These will vary from case to case.

f

Lord Denning MR in Smith v. Inner London Education Authority [1978] 1 All ER 411 at p. 418 while discussing American Cyanamid Co. v. Ethicon Ltd. said this:

g

... I am of opinion that a local authority should not be restrained, even by an interlocutory injunction, from exercising its statutory powers or doing its duty towards the public at large, unless the plaintiff shows that he has a 'real prospect of succeeding in his claim for a permanent injunction at the trial.

- a* On the question of a serious question to be tried the plaintiffs' counsel submitted that the first defendant's notice under s. 72 of the Street, Drainage and Building Act 1974 was faulty because the work at the temple were renovations to the existing temple. The decision in the case of Tropiland Sdn. Bhd. v. PP [1993] 2 CLJ 670 was relied on. In that case the High Court, on appeal altered the
- b* convictions under s. 70(1) to that under s. 79(1) of the Act. That was because the two erections complained of in that case were done inside an existing building and therefore outside the purview of s. 70(1). The offences according to the court should properly be under s. 79(1) of the Act. In the present case the construction works were on and outside the building and not done inside
- c* an existing building. This can be clearly seen from the photographs exhibited by both parties in their various affidavits. The sketch plans exhibited by the first defendant also clearly showed that apart from work on the temple proper, the construction also involved building in open air new structures like pillars and roofs attached to the temple. These are not disputed by the plaintiffs in their affidavits. That case therefore is not applicable to the facts of the present
- d* case.

e It was further argued on behalf of the plaintiffs that the construction work involves renovation work to the existing building and as such the offence should by virtue of sub-s. 16(b)(ii) of s. 70, be exempted from the requirement of sub-s. (2) of s. 70 ie, from the submission of any plan to the first defendant. I am afraid that provision cannot assist the plaintiffs as the Act provides a very wide definition of "building". Section 3 provides:

- f* "building" includes any house, hut, shed or roofed enclosure, whether used for the purpose of a human habitation or otherwise, and also any wall, fence, platform, staging, gate, post, pillar, paling, frame, hoarding, slip, dock, wharf, pier, jetty, landing-stage or bridge, or any structure support or foundation connected to the foregoing;

- g* That definition carries three limbs and it covers the whole spectrum of construction works which fall within any of the three limbs. That being so, the construction works as carried out at the temple clearly could fall under sub-s. 16(a) of s. 70, as "work on the site thereof for or in respect of a new building" would easily be work relating to the construction of "any new structure" connected to an existing "house, hut, shed or roofed enclosure" (ie, the temple). As stated earlier, the photographs exhibited clearly showed ongoing
- h* construction not only to the temple but other new structures like pillars and roofs attached to the temple. As sub-s. 16(a) is not covered by the proviso of the same subsection, the plaintiffs are therefore required to submit the necessary plans to the first defendant for the necessary approval.

On the submission of the failure of the first defendant to give any notice prior to the demolition notice, the provision of s. 72(1)(a) allows the first defendant to issue that notice to the plaintiffs to demolish the building erected in contravention of s. 70 “within such time as the local authority may specify”. In fact that section also enabled the first defendant to issue such a notice to any building erected prior to the coming into force of the Act and in contravention of any law then in force to buildings. Under those circumstances, the burden would be on the plaintiffs to show that the temple had obtained the necessary approval as a building. Sub-section (6) of s. 72 relied on the plaintiffs on the other hand applies only to notice of at least 30 days where the building is to be demolished by the local authority themselves.

As such I find that the notice issued by the first defendant was, on all the available facts before me, proper and in accordance with the relevant provisions of the Act. On the question of advance notice to demolish as submitted by the plaintiff’s counsel, apart from the aforesaid, it is noteworthy that from the time the plaintiffs were served the notice on 26 February 2003 until this application there was a lapse of more than three months and no demolition happened. This was despite the fact the notice required the plaintiffs to demolish the temple immediately. Apart from that, the plaintiffs from their own affidavits seemed to be fully aware of the need for the proper plans to be submitted to the first defendant. This can be seen in para. 34 of their statement of claim and The Star newspaper report dated 5 June 2003 exhibited with the plaintiffs’ supplementary affidavit dated 8 June 2003. That report reads:

Division chairman T. Manogharan said the 80-year old temple was one of the oldest Hindu temples on the island. ‘We understand that the temple was renovated without approval from the local authority but we hope the state government would reconsider its decision,’ Manogharan said ...

Earlier at 8.30am, the Langkawi Municipal council and district office had moved heavy machinery into the area following countless reminders to the temple committee to relocate because it had encroached onto a public road ... According to Manogharan, the temple community apologised for not having the foresight to notify the local authorities of their need to extend the temple, saying they were ignorant of the process ...

The plaintiffs relied strongly on the fact that the temple was in existence since 1928, ie, well before the acquisition by the State Government of the land on which it was built and the subsequent reservation as a federal road. The temple existence obviously was based on the goodwill and permission of the two previous landowners, the British plantation and subsequently Boon Siew Sdn. Bhd. Throughout its existence it has never acquired any legal, registrable or proprietary interest on the land on which it was situated. Nothing was averred by the plaintiffs to that effect.

- a* When the land in question was acquired by the State Government in 1985 from Boon Siew Sdn. Bhd., its status reverts back as “state land” within the meaning and effect of the National Land Code 1965. Furthermore, that land was gazetted as a federal road reserve by virtue of the State Government’s decision and the Minister’s order respectively. These facts are not disputed at all by the plaintiffs
- b* but are actually admitted directly and indirectly by them in various parts of their affidavits. The temple therefore has no legal interest or status on the land, and in fact and in law it is nothing more than a squatter allowed to be there by the second defendant until the land is actually needed by the Federal Government for its purposes. Its continued existence there is actually an offence
- c* under s. 425(1) of the National Land Code. The temple’s long existence on the land per se cannot defeat or override the State Government’s title over it.

The position of the temple in law is not unlike the appellants in the Federal Court case of Sidek b. Haji Muhamad & Ors. v. Government of Perak [1982] CLJ 244; [1982] CLJ (Rep) 321. In that case Raja Azlan Shah CJ (as His Highness was then) said this:

- d* ... In our opinion there is one issue which lies at the heart of this case. It is whether the appellants have a cause of action against the respondents. The answer is obvious. It is clear beyond doubt that they cannot succeed because they are squatters. Squatters have no right either in law or in equity. (See McPhail v. Persons Unknown C.A.). It does not lie in their mouths to assert that they used and occupied the land as squatters.
- e*

- f* Their position under the National Land Code is not dissimilar. Section 48 of the Code is against them. It says that “No title to State land shall be acquired by possession, unlawful occupation or occupation under any licence for any period whatsoever”. Section 78 of the Code is also relevant. It says that alienation of State land shall only be effected in accordance with the provisions of Chapter 3, of Part Five and Chapter 2 ... Section 341 of the Code empowers the State Authority to dispossess any squatters at any time. So the limitation period does operate against the State. What equitable right or interest can be conjured up for the squatters who have illegally occupied State land? Squatters
- g* go into possession by, or as a result of, illegal occupation of State land. Illegal occupation of State land is an offence under section 425 of the National Land Code. It is well established that a court of equity will never assist squatters to resist an order of possession illegally acquired; it will never intervene in aid of wrong-doers. (See Grafton v. Griffin) ...

The Court of Appeal case of Chellapa a/l K. Kalimuthu v. Sime UEP Properties Bhd. [1999] 3 CLJ 247 was also relied by the plaintiffs. The circumstances in that case is however different from the present case. There the court found that there was a serious question to be tried as to whether the plaintiff, suing on behalf of a temple, had a legitimate interest and expectation which the court should protect. The respondent, a developer, on whose land the temple is situated was fully aware that when they applied for conversion, the State Authority had imposed a special condition protecting the status and situation of the temple. In the present case there was conversely, a State Authority decision to first acquire the land without any such special condition in relation to the temple, and consequently to reserve it as a federal road. That case therefore is of no assistance to the plaintiffs.

The only thing left now for me is to peruse the prayers pleaded by the plaintiffs in their statement of claim to determine whether they raise any serious question to be tried or whether they have a real prospect of succeeding in their claim for a permanent injunction, or for any other remedy for that matter at the trial. Their prayers can be reproduced as follows:

- (a) satu deklarasi bahawa Kuil Sri Muniswaran, Kuah, Langkawi berhak untuk wujud atas tapaknya terkini (a declaration that the temple known as Sri Muniswaran, Kuah, Langkawi be allowed to remain in its present site).
- (b) satu deklarasi bahawa tindakan Defendan Pertama untuk meroboh Kuil Sri Muniswaran, Kuah, Langkawi adalah tidak sah.
- (c) satu injunksi melarang pihak Defendan Pertama meroboh Kuil Sri Muniswaran, Kuah, Langkawi.

DAN/ATAU SECARA ALTERNATIF

- (d) bahawa Defendan Pertama mengubah jalan yang berhampiran Kuil Sri Muniswaran supaya Kuil tersebut diletak di luar tanah rezab jalan.
- (e) bahawa Defendan Pertama mengistiyarkan (gazette) tapak Kuil tersebut di semua pelan perancangan pembangunan Langkawi.
- (f) bahawa Defendan Kedua, memperolehi tanah yang diperlukan untuk mengubah jalan.

A close study of all the prayers of the plaintiffs would, to my mind, in the circumstances of this case, show that they are all misconcieved in law. They are basically orders sought by the plaintiffs to be made by the court which are beyond the jurisdiction of the court. With regards to prayer (a), as found earlier, the plaintiffs would have no legal basis to be entitled to that prayer. It

- a* is established law that title to state land can only be acquired by the process of alienation effected in accordance with the provisions of the National Land Code. Since the plaintiffs are in illegal occupation of a state land gazetted as a road reserve, the State Authority has the right to do whatever necessary under the National Land Code and it is not for the courts without any valid basis to order the State Authority to confer any interest on the land to anyone.

Prayer (b) cannot, for the reasons earlier stated, be granted to the plaintiff. Prayer (c) is a similar prayer as sought in this application and its prospect of succeeding, in my opinion, of course depends on the decision of this court. Prayer (d) involves the exercise of the State Authority's power and discretion under s. 62 of the National Land Code 1965. Again, it is not for the courts to direct the Executive on how to exercise their powers and discretion conferred upon them by Parliament. The position is the same with prayers (e) and (f) which involve the power of the State Authority under the Town and Country Planning Act 1974 and Land Acquisition Act 1960 respectively.

- d* The inevitable conclusion from all these is that the plaintiffs have failed to show that they have any legal or proprietary interest that needed to be protected by way of an interim injunction. I find that the affidavits of the plaintiffs and their statement of claim disclose no serious question to be tried. Their statement of claim and all the prayers, for the reasons given, accordingly has no real prospect of succeeding at the trial. On principle, as stated earlier, since I find that there is no serious question to be tried, there is no need for me to further consider the other requirements like adequacy of compensation by an award of damages and the question of balance of convenience. However since this application obviously involves a very sensitive matter ie, a house of worship,
- f* I will briefly touch on the other requirements to show that this court strained to consider all matters that could be considered.

- On the issue of adequacy of award of damages, the counsel for the plaintiffs submitted that the temple is irreplaceable and that if the interim injunction is not allowed the subject matter will perish. I find from the plaintiffs own affidavit that it is not so. From the two newspaper reports exhibited the plaintiffs were willing to accept an alternative site for the temple if granted. The Star newspaper report dated 5 June 2003 reads:
- g*

... The temple committee would speak to Mentri Besar Datuk Seri Syed Razak Syed Zain to provide a site for the temple relocation ... a

Syed Razak said the state was willing to talk with the temple committee if they wanted land for a new temple.

However, he said, they would have to apply for the new land. b

In the Berita Harian newspaper report dated 5 June 2003, the second plaintiff was quoted as follows:

Kami rela menarik balik perintah injuksi itu dan mengalihkan kuil berkenaan sendiri jika ada hitam putih mengenai pemberian tanah sama ada dipindahkan ke kawasan baru atau kuil ini dianjakkan ke dalam dari tapak asal. c

What is obvious is that it is not a serious problem to the plaintiffs to set up the temple elsewhere. So should the plaintiffs be successful in the trial, which I seriously doubt, they could be compensated by another site being granted for the temple and that seems to be a perfectly acceptable and adequate remedy to the plaintiffs. d

From the dated photographs exhibited by both the plaintiffs' and the first defendant's affidavits one thing is clear. The construction work at the temple was ongoing at least between 3 February 2003 to 5 June 2003, that is, before the date the notice was issued by the first defendant (ie, 16 February 2003 also the date of the investigation by the first defendant's officer) until well after the date the notice was served on the plaintiffs (ie, 26 February 2003). This was because from the photographs dated 3 February 2003, apart from other structures, the temple exterior was not painted. On the photographs dated 5 June 2003 the roof and walls of the temple was by then fully decorated and painted with various colours. In other words, the construction work at the temple went on unabated and oblivious to the notice served upon them three and a half months earlier, to demolish the temple. That certainly is not a conduct of people about to suffer an impending irreplaceable loss. e

On the issue of balance of convenience, it goes without saying that, in the circumstances of this case, the balance weighs heavily on side of the first defendant. In the case of Tenaga Nasional Bhd. v. Dolomite Industrial Park [2000] 1 CLJ 695 at pp. 700-701 Gopal Sri Ram JCA states as follows: f

That brings us to the question of remedy. The evidence on record shows that the offending pylon forms part of the national grid for the conveyance of electricity. It is therefore clear that if a mandatory injunction is maintained there will be disruption of electricity supply in Peninsular Malaysia. It is not in the public interest that such a disruption should occur ... g a In Smith v. Inner London Education Authority [1978] 1 All ER 411, Browne LJ held that public interest was always a relevant consideration in granting specific relief. This is how he put it (at p 422g-h of the report):

b ... I think counsel for the authority is right in saying that where the defendant is a public authority performing duties to the public one must look at the balance of convenience more widely, and take into account the interests of the public in general to whom these duties are owed.

No doubt that was said in the context of an interlocutory injunction. But we do not regard the principle to be any different in the case of a final injunction, whether prohibitory or mandatory in nature.

c The learned judge in this case failed to take into account public interest. If the learned judge had done so he would have held that the public interest outweighs the respondent's interest.

d As in that case, I find that in the present case is a situation where public interest should outweigh the plaintiffs' interest. The first defendant is a local authority established by the second defendant in consultation with the Minister under s. 3 of the Local Government Act 1976 and is also conferred with responsibilities and powers by the Street, Drainage and Building Act 1974. The authority for reservation of the land as federal road reserve by the State Government is provided in s. 62(2)(a) of the National Land Code. I am duty bound to consider the wider interest of the public since the first defendant in their enforcement activities was merely exercising their duties, responsibilities and powers conferred upon them by Parliament. I cannot find anything to suggest that the first defendant acted illegally or ultra vires their powers in this matter.

e After the service of the notice on the plaintiffs, the first defendant has acted with much restraint, meeting the plaintiffs twice and apparently, deciding to take action only after a lapse of more than three months of non-compliance of the notice by the plaintiffs. The first defendant explained in its affidavit that it accommodated the temple all along as the road was then not required to be widened. Apart from the encroachment, the danger posed to road users by the temple, being a solid concrete building just adjacent to a primary road (as in the gazetted local development plan exhibited in the first defendant's affidavit), is obvious.

Finally, in her concluding remarks, counsel for the plaintiffs submitted that the two defendants should respect the fundamental right of the plaintiffs to practice their religion and to own and run their temple under art. II of the Federal Constitution. On this matter, let me make it absolutely clear that this case has nothing to do with infringement of the plaintiffs' rights as enshrined in art. II. That right as provided in cl. (3)(a)(b) and (c) of that article is subject to the condition that they must conduct themselves "in accordance with law". There are countless houses of worship in this country existing peacefully without any unnecessary interference. That is because they conducted themselves within the law. The plaintiffs, like everyone else, are duty bound to obey and respect the law.

This application was heard on 4 June 2003 as an ex parte application whereupon the ex parte interim injunction was granted. Coincidentally, that ex parte interim injunction order lapses today after twenty-one days. However, upon service on the first defendant, this matter, is, by law, converted to an inter partes application (see: the Court of Appeal case of RIH Services (M) Sdn. Bhd. v. Tanjung Tuan Hotel Sdn. Bhd. [2002] 3 CLJ 83). Therefore, based on all the aforesaid reasons that I have given, I dismiss this inter partes application for an interim injunction with costs.
